The pattern in which energy moves - the law by which energy moves - that law is energy or psyche itself. Energy, psyche, or law are one and the same. The law does not stand outside of the energy, and the energy is not a thing outside of the law which is the direction of energy. Everything is self-moving, self-directing psyche.

The interconnection of all energy is the self-progression (^{self}self-direction) of psyche flowing from modification into uniformity - meaning that modified states flow in and not apart from uniformity. The laws which govern in the modifications are, in each particular instance, one law but varying in its myriad expressions, in the myriads of forms assumed by matter which is energy, which is law, which is psyche.

That which we identify as matter is our observation of energy. That observation of energy is also our observation of the law governing energy which is law itself or psyche. So that when we observe energy, we really observe law, and when we observe law we observe psyche. Actually we observe intelligence in the things we see.

What we take to be physical law is then the law of orderliness mind or psyche whose intelligence is proof of intelligence though not of intelligence as defined ^{confined to} by human judgement.

We say that intelligence is demonstrable is only demonstrable in human consciousness, but what criterion enables us to make this assertion? We have none but we do have a standard of intelligence - the human consciousness the intelligence of which is perhaps no more than a matter of
